Synopsis – While hiking through the mountains, Mike and Tony a father and son find an old Spanish gold mine. In it, they discover 85 bars of gold worth 45 million dollars. The local banker and some of his friends scheme to steal the gold; however, the father sets several intricate and complex traps that cause chaos and injury.

While Mike and Tony dig out the gold bars, they encounter dangerous traps set by the Indians over two hundred years ago. Barely escaping death, they succeed in carrying out only 4 bars of gold at a time because of their weight.

Mike takes the four bars to the bank to deposit in the vault. He tells the vice president about the other 81 bars still hidden in the mine, and how he plans to retrieve them in the next few days.

The banker gets an idea. If he can secretly follow them to learn the location, he'll steal the gold. He finds 11 shady guys to help. As they follow Mike into the mountains, they are faced with one disaster after another, getting caught by the Indian traps and those set by Mike.

Every couple of days, Mike and his son bring four more bars out of the mountains. They are aware that they are constantly followed. In an attempt to scare them off, Mike sets hazards along the path which will cause bodily harm.

Finally the banker and his friends find the location of the mine but are surprised to see the entrance has been sealed by tons of exploded rock. The banker and his friends attempt to dig out the opening. What did they encounter? Were they successful? And what was waiting for them in the end?
